

Clandestine “SPY” Radio Operations and the Enigma in World War - II

Tom Perera - W1TP

Tom is a retired professor of neuroscience who has been researching WW-II communications technology for many years. He will describe and show the desperate attempts by the resistance to build radios to keep informed about the progress of the war and by spies to communicate critically important intelligence information back to the Allies while being ruthlessly hunted by German direction-finding teams.